

Uganda is one of the most beautiful countries in Africa, with fantastic natural scenery, half the world's remaining mountain gorilla population and some of the friendliest people you could hope to meet

Uganda

As well as the famous gorillas Uganda also offers some of the region's more peaceful natural parks, where wildlife viewing does not involve long waits in line behind a dozen or more vehicles. Uganda is a beautiful country with a great deal to offer, with its natural attractions being the best in the region. Many will agree that there has never been a better time to visit. As with most of our destinations, tourism is in its infancy and is a key priority for the country's future development.

Before independence, Uganda was a prosperous and cohesive country. Its great beauty led Winston Churchill to refer to it as the "Pearl of Africa", but by early 1986 Uganda lay shattered and bankrupt, broken by tribal animosity, nepotism, military tyranny and politicians who had gone mad on power. Despite the horrors of the past, Ugandans have weathered the storm remarkably well. You will not meet a sullen, bitter or cowed people. Rather they are smiling and friendly, with openness absent in other places.

Our weekly best of Uganda itinerary is the perfect chance to see the incredible primates of the African jungle whilst staying in comfortable lodge-based accommodation. The raw beauty of Uganda is reflected in special wildlife areas such as Queen Elizabeth II National Park. The key highlight of this tour is set deep in the rainforest near Bwindi - where we hope to catch a glimpse of the reclusive Mountain Gorilla in its natural habitat.
